

Mealey's™ Teleconference: Wage & Hour

October 24, 2006, 2:00 PM EASTERN TIME

In employment law, over the last three years the number of wage and hour suits has surpassed the number of discrimination class actions filed each year.

Settlements reach into the tens of millions of dollars. This year both Sears and Pizza Hut paid out $15M in employee overtime class action suits. In another case, an IBM salesman was denied his suit for $2.1M in additional commissions.

When you attend Mealey's Teleconference: Wage & Hour, you'll find out what's working and what's not from a duo of highly experienced plaintiff and defense attorneys.

You'll learn how to litigate complex wage & hour suits involving: non-exempt/exempt misclassifications, overtime, "off-the-clock" claims, missed rest period and meal breaks, denied reimbursements and miscalculated bonuses.

How A Teleconference Works

A teleconference is like a large conference call, but in a more controlled, radio-program-like environment. Simply dial the 800 number and you're connected! We will provide you with an Internet link so you can follow the speakers' presentations and other written materials throughout the call. A question-and-answer session will open after all speaker presentations are complete.

Quick, Convenient and Cost-Effective

A Mealey's™ teleconference takes less than two hours out of your busy schedule, and still provides you with the expert insights and information you need to keep on top of the latest litigation hot spots. You can listen from the comfort of your office or home, even when other business takes you on the road.

And best of all, you won't experience any extra time out of the office or travel hassles and expenses!

Dialing instructions for the program and the URL for accessing your conference materials will be e-mailed to you within 48 hours of the teleconference. (You will need Acrobat Reader, available for free at www.adobe.com.)

International calls are welcome and easily accommodated. And you can register right up until the teleconference begins.
